Left: where the incumbent was weakest. Right: how that vote split — the 50% rule on the bar is the runner-up line, so pale means Maghzaoui was ahead and dark means Zammel was, with the shade giving the margin. Both panels are ordinary shares on the fixed 0–100% scale, so a shade here means what it means everywhere else; the bracket on each bar shows the range that panel's units occupy.

Beware the runner-up as a category here: 72 imadas are exact ties between the two challengers, on counts of 1 to 38 votes. The shade, which is the margin, is the part to trust.
